the kids aren't all right

(in response to a painting by Aaron White)

Mj Taylor

hungry-eyed/chins in clouds
looking to us
for answers
to questions
we are afraid to face
the kids
grow up
become soldiers
thinking
war
is something
natural as birth or grow into midnight junkies
lurking raping thieving
don't blame
them
'were taught by us
the kids
are thrown on stage
asked to sing
'twinkle-twinkle'
wounded
is the kids
plenty of people
in this world
make them feel
alone
but let'em
mature outta
those baby clothes
first
do not be mistaken
don't be blinded
the kids
were never
all right

Mj Taylor is a world renown mathematician at a seasoned age of 17. He sometimes writes poetry…but equations are his true calling. However, he does have a poetry talk show on blogtalkradio, thanks to Rafael Alvarado. He is inspired mostly by the Denver/Venice West beats, because he grew up reading them. His dad was one of those said beats…but doesn't share the same love for mathematics.

Cobalt Poets Series # 233 ~ June 22, 2010 ~ PoetrySuperHighway.com/cobalt